PRESENT DAY: Celebration of Texas Successes

- First, and one of only a few, court lead, state level collaborations in the country
- One of only a few states that has documented 10 years of thoughtful attention, efforts and progress to improve education outcomes for children in care
- Ongoing agency commitments at the Children’s Commission, TEA and DFPS (among many other state agencies and leaders) to maintain staffing, policies and practices to support the work
- Partners who understand the importance of data, and commit time, energy, and resources to ensuring data is matched, analyzed, and used to guide the work.
- Tremendous leadership and commitment on the part of the Permanent Judicial Commission to lead this effort and devote staff and resources to continue to address key issue areas through committee and sub-committee work
Looking to the Future
It’s a Marathon; Not a Sprint!
Glimmers of hope in some of the data—but continued poor outcomes means more work must be done.

Ten years of progress has created more opportunities to focus on the issue of improved education stability and success for children in care—we cannot overlook or miss those opportunities for continued advances.

Data will play a critical role in future efforts—changes to AFCARS and implementation of ESSA data requirements.

Data sharing at the local level will become critical to comply with state data requirements and tracking and accountability of new policies and practices.
